

Public involvement process

One of the requirements of the company's Forest Management Agreement (FMA) and of the province's forest management planning process is the inclusion of a meaningful opportunity for public review and input. Spray Lake Sawmills has initiated public involvement processes for some of the higher profile operating plans in the past but will now formalize the process and include a broader landscape level of forest management planning.

As this process is intended to address your ideas and concerns we need your input. How would you like to see us structure the process? There are many options, ranging from: open houses, stakeholder advisory committees, workshops, newsletters, advertisements and websites.
